Use of Stone in Building Course 2018

Thistle Holborn, The Kingsley, London
11 October 2018

Introduction

This popular course gives an overview and general knowledge of the design and use of natural stone and takes account of the current needs of those involved in specifying and working with stone. The course gives delegates assistance in selecting and using natural stone in many different ways.

Areas covered:

- Geology of stone, including selecting and quarrying
- Stone testing, British and European Standards and CE Marking
- Detailing of stone, including working drawings and fixings
- Masonry and architecture, including external masonry and rain screen cladding
- Stone for interiors
- External paving
- Ethical sourcing, environmental considerations and sustainability of stone.

The course is suitable for qualified and trainee architects, designers, specifiers, surveyors, planners, those who have recently entered the stone industry trade and others who wish to achieve a better understanding of natural stone and its use.
