

Case Study: Bethany Riley Interiors: Limestone Restoration

We love working with Interior Designers who care about preserving existing features in a home and we jumped at the chance to work with Bethany Riley.

The Service

Bethany is an award-winning Interior Designer who graduated from the prestigious Ingham School of Design. Bethany offers full Project Management services that are completely bespoke to the client.

The Project

We were approached by Bethany to advise on the options for restoring the limestone floor at a North London project. Working with a high-profile client, Bethany had been asked to renovate the home whilst keeping the structural aspects the same.

“One of the key decisions we made in the project was choosing to restore the limestone flooring that ran throughout the ground floor, staircase and landing. After considering the potential complications that could arise with replacing the floor completely, we decided to bring it back to its original state using a diamond resurfacing and polishing technique. This, along with simply changing the hue of the downlights from warm white to cool white brought the beautiful natural stone back to life.”

The Process

As with all projects of this size, we attended the site to provide a sample. For an entrance this grand, a high shine finish on the stone was the perfect option. This required 8 stages of diamond resurfacing to bring the finish back to the perfect level of shine. Special care was taken for the limestone staircase, although partially hidden by the stair runner, a central and most important feature of the project.
